

SERVING MARIN COUNTY AND SAN FRANCISCO FOR OVER 25 YEARS

I MOVED TO MARIN COUNTY FROM DUKE UNIVERSITY, where I was a Neurology faculty member, and opened my private practice 25 years ago. Over time, I learned about the residents, healthcare challenges, and the county's culture. Practicing western medicine with a holistic approach has aligned with my patients' preferences, making this journey very rewarding.

I have also been working as a consulting physician at MarinHealth and Novato Community Hospitals. Over the years, I have witnessed healthcare transformation across age groups, largely driven by advances in medications and procedures. While Marin's population is healthier in many areas, it is also older, so even those who take excellent care of themselves eventually require attention.

Dementia, including Alzheimer's disease, stroke, spine and balance problems are very common among our elderly. The needs of these residents shaped my practice. We can now diagnose patients with memory problems at early stages, and thanks to the advanced research, we can offer anti-amyloid medications to reverse the progression of their illness.

I am the stroke director of MarinHealth Medical Center. I see many stroke patients with age-related cardiovascular conditions. With recent advances, we can now reverse the debilitating symptoms of acute stroke if patients arrive at the emergency room early. Our cutting-edge stroke program in MarinHealth, in collaboration with UCSF, supports these breakthroughs.

NEUROLOGY CLINIC OF MARIN

ILKCAN COKGOR, M.D.

I enjoy treating a variety of neurological disorders and commit to challenging cases like seizures, multiple sclerosis, and movement disorders. Many patients can't commute to distant tertiary centers, making experienced local neurologists essential.

Many young people also work in stressful jobs in our county. Therefore, migraines, neck and back pains, and insomnia are very common among them. I offer the newest medications, which have the least side effects, and do therapeutic Botox when appropriate.

Every patient deserves expert care delivered with compassion and clarity. By integrating modern neurology with a holistic understanding of each person's life and goals, I work to ensure that treatment supports overall well-being. I am grateful for the trust Marin residents have placed in me over the years and remain dedicated to helping our community thrive.
